

An Essay on the Origin and Prospects of Man, Vol. 1 of 3 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from An Essay on the Origin and Prospects of Man, Vol. 1 of 3I have, in common with every other human being who has thought, wished my life here to be prolonged to a happier existence hereafter. Revelation has in me to mere hope added faith. Still have I sought to found my belief, not merely on the promises made through the medium of other men, who, like myself, might be deceived, or deceive, but on the unerring course of that nature which, when rightly viewed, admits of no deceit. The following pages are the result of my inquiry.I advance in them nothing as an absolute certainty. That of which man may be actually certain amounts to very little.About the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
